

Grading criteria SASH85 The Emergence of European Culture, 7,5 credits, approved 2018-08-21

- To be awarded the grade E on the course, the student must have been awarded this grade on all learning outcomes.
- To be awarded the grade D on the course, the student must have been awarded this grade on at least two learning outcomes.
- To be awarded the grade C on the course, the student must have been awarded this grade on at least two learning outcomes.
- To be awarded the grade B on the course, the student must have been awarded this grade on at least two learning outcomes.
- To be awarded the grade A on the course, the student must have been awarded this grade on at least two learning outcomes and at least C on the third.

Learning outcomes	E	D	C	B	A
Knowledge and understanding Account for the main features of the development of cultural history during European prehistory, particularly with regard to the development and spread of agriculture, ore management and the emergence of complex societies in southern, central and northern Europe.	The assignment uses information and definitions encountered in the literature, which refer to the development and diffusion of complex societies in European prehistory.	Information and definitions concerning the emergence of complex societies in European prehistory are supported in the text by different examples from the literature.	The text outlines and describes the key issues connected with the development of cultural history during European prehistory, with specific reference to the emergence and development of complex societies in European prehistory.	The text presents a complete overview of the emergence and development of complex societies and its key issues in European prehistory. Theories and facts are presented and discussed in the text in relation with specific examples from the literature.	The text critically discusses and analyses the development of complex societies in Europe. Specifically, different examples from the literature are use in the text in support of a critical assessment of the key issues that characterized this phenomenon in European prehistory.

Competence and skills Use archaeological material to explain the conditions for, and the origin, spread and implications of important societal changes in European prehistory, related to e.g. agriculture, metallurgy and the emergence of complex societies in southern, central and northern Europe.	By using information and definitions encountered in the literature, the assignment provides a sufficient overview of the conditions for, and the origin, spread and implications of important societal changes in European prehistory. Participation in seminars.	Information and definitions concerning the conditions for, and the origin, spread and implications of important societal changes in European prehistory are supported in the text by different examples from the literature. Participation in seminars.	The text outlines and describes the key issues connected with the origin, spread and implications of important societal changes European prehistory. Participation in seminars.	The text presents a complete overview of the conditions for, and the origin, spread and implications of important societal changes in European prehistory. Theories and facts are presented and discussed in the text in relation with specific examples from the literature. Participation in seminars.	The text critically discusses and analyse the conditions for, and the origin, spread and implications of important societal changes in European prehistory. In specific different examples from the literature are use in the text in support of a critical assessment of the key issues that characterized the emergence of complex societies. Participation in seminars.
Judgement and approach Critically approach the interpretations of European prehistory.	The assignment lists different interpretations presented in the literature concerning the emergence of complex societies in European prehistory.	The text employs examples from the literature for presenting the different interpretation concerning the emergence of complex societies in European prehistory.	The assignment identifies and discuss the key issues that characterized the different interpretations of the emergence of complex societies in European prehistory.	The text discusses and analyses the different interpretations proposed in the literature that concern the introduction and diffusion of complex societies in European prehistory.	The text is characterized by a critical framework that combines and takes into account facts and different theoretical perspectives concerning the introduction and diffusion of complex societies in European prehistory.